

Questions About Drones

The pentagon is increasingly relying on drones to carry out military attacks -- for example Afghanistan, Pakistan, Yemen, Iraq and Libya.

Are drones good?

Is it morally better to kill someone from a distance than up close?

Is killing people with drones in a country in which war has not been declared still warfare?

Does the fact that drones do not put US soldiers directly at risk make them a morally better weapon?

Is killing someone with a drone assassination?

What would you think about another country that used drones to kill innocent people in Albany?

Are people in Pakistan irrational to dislike the United States for using drones that have killed innocent people in their country?

Questions About Drones

The pentagon is increasingly relying on drones to carry out military attacks -- for example Afghanistan, Pakistan, Yemen, Iraq and Libya.

Are drones good?

Is it morally better to kill someone from a distance than up close?

Is killing people with drones in a country in which war has not been declared still warfare?

Does the fact that drones do not put US soldiers directly at risk make them a morally better weapon?

Is killing someone with a drone assassination?

What would you think about another country that used drones to kill innocent people in Albany?

Are people in Pakistan irrational to dislike the United States for using drones that have killed innocent people in their country?